Energy Office Announces Progress On Energy Conservation Program

Louis R. Lawson, Jr., Director of the Virginia Energy Office, announced recently the completion of the first phase of the development of a State Energy Management and Conservation Program (SEMP). He said, "We have met 23 times with eleven Advisory Groups representing one hundred and thirty-five organizations in the past two months. We asked the groups to give us their advice on voluntary energy conservation programs to save five percent of the expected energy needs in the Commonwealth by 1980. Conservation is the most economically and environmentally sound short-term source of energy available to us." The final plan will be submitted to the Governor's Office for approval in early January. The State's conservation program will become a part of the national effort to reduce energy consumption as set forth by President Ford in the Energy Policy and Conservation Act in 1975.

Energy Director Lawson said, "We were deeply gratified and not at all surprised at the overwhelming and enthusiastic response of the participants. The final program will represent the best thinking of the many individuals from across the State who volunteered their services to study these complex problems." Lawson pointed out that Virginia is one of the few States using the process of group reviews on energy conservation options. He added that he felt the method would produce an acceptable and workable plan for the Commonwealth.

In other action at the Friday meeting, the supervisors gave tenative approval to a program to remove abandoned autos from the county.

Cornell B. Goldman of the VPI Extension Service, outlined the program under which persons could have the cars removed free by contacting his office.

Under 1975 legislation, the Division of Motor Vehicles will pay the county $12 for each auto removed. This money comes from a $2 fee as part of the titling tax on cars.

The supervisors approved the program provided a suitable place can be found at the county landfill to hold the vehicles until they are taken to a metal shredder.

Lloyd G. Walton, Division Superintendent of Appomattox County Schools, told the supervisors the current school budget seems to be in line with expenditures, but cuts in 1977-78 state funding as outlined by Governor Mills E. Godwin, Jr. could hurt the program.

The current budget has no surpluses but they feel confident they will get by.

Referring to the plan outlined by the governor to have localities absorb $78.8 million of the state's $117.2 million anticipated deficit, Walton said "it would be a real blow to the school system to get the kind of cuts they are mentioning.

Under the alternative outlined this week, Appomattox County would lose $224,810 in state school aid.

Walton said he is optimistic that the plan will not become a reality.

In other business, the county Farm Bureau asked the supervisors to begin working on a count comprehensive plan to avoid ..aving the state develop one to meet the federal mandate that all localities have plans by 1980.
